SLIDE 16-17: Water Reuse

Child 1: (Gul) Water treatment: Domestic and waste water can be treated and be made potable for reuse by waste water treatment. There are primarily two methods of waste water treatment.

Activated sludge process is a common method of aerobic wastewater treatment. The purpose of the process is to reduce amount of dissolved organic matter from wastewater, using microorganisms growing in aeration tanks. This method is primarily used to treat for treating low strength wastewater (< 1000 mg COD/L) like municipal wastewater.

Microorganisms convert dissolved organic matter into their own biomass, and the formed semi-liquid material is then separated. The treated wastewater runs over the edges of secondary clarifiers. A part of the settled sludge (RAS) is being returned into aeration tanks, where is mixed with "fresh" primary treated wastewater and biooxidation process goes on. The settled sludge goes to further treatment - anaerobic decomposition in controlled conditions with biogas (methane) production.

Let us see a video on Activated sludge process used in our neighbourhood....Play Video

Child 2: (Siddhangana): Anaerobic wastewater treatment differs from conventional aerobic treatment. The absence of oxygen leads to controlled conversion of complex organic pollutants, mainly to carbon dioxide and methane. Anaerobic treatment has favourable effects like removal of higher organic loading, low sludge production, high pathogen removal, biogas gas production and low energy consumption.

Psychrophilic anaerobic treatment can be an attractive option to conventional anaerobic digestion for municipal sewage and industrial wastewaters that are discharged at moderate to low temperature.

Child 3 (Pragya): While greywater may look "dirty," it is a safe and even beneficial source of irrigation water in a yard. If released into rivers, lakes, or estuaries, the nutrients in greywater become pollutants, but to plants, they are valuable fertilizer. Aside from the obvious benefits of saving water (and money on your water bill), reusing your greywater keeps it out of the sewer or septic system, thereby reducing the chance that it will pollute local water bodies. Reusing greywater for irrigation reconnects urban residents and our backyard gardens to the natural water cycle.

The easiest way to use greywater is to pipe it directly outside and use it to water ornamental plants or fruit trees. Greywater can be used directly on vegetables as long as it doesn't touch edible parts of the plants. In any greywater system, it is essential to put nothing toxic down the drain—no bleach, no dye, no bath salts, no cleanser, no shampoo with
